'95 Sea Gull Century rides away successful

Victor J. Minoglio Jr.
Flyer Staff Writer

A record 5,362 riders from 35 different states, as well as 11 riders from Canada, converged upon Salisbury State University this past weekend for the 1995 Sea Gull Century. The Century, a 100 mile bike tour from Salisbury to Assateague and back, is a nationally acclaimed bicycle tour and was listed as one of the top ten century rides in the U.S. by Bicycling magazine in 1993.

Since the Sea Gull Century was formed in 1989 with only 63 participants, it has grown immensely in its popularity. The 5,362 riders preregistered and paid a $20 registration fee with proceeds going to the SSU Bicycle Club, who sponsored the event. The Bicycle Club also matched the $5,100 donated by Century riders for the SSU chapter of Habitat for Humanity. That's a total of $10,200 which will be used to help purchase building materials for Habitat.

It is estimated that the participants of Sea Gull Century '95 brought over $750,000 to local businesses. James Phillips, a member of the Seagull Century committee, said "the century has a ripple effect on the local economy, through the participants and their families weekend, involving 4,485 riders, 878 riders chose the metric Century ride of 63 miles. Overall, everyone seemed to have a great time.

Brian Sinnet, an avid rider from Annapolis, whose main concern was the weather, said he was "glad to see the skies stay clear and the roads dry for everyone," as were all of the riders who encompassed a wide range of skill levels and age groups.

Tom and Karen Hartley, and their 5-year-old daughter Brittany, finished the metric Century in just over four hours on a three-seat bicycle.

Actually, the bike held four, since Karen was riding with her son Tom Jr., soon to be born.

Dr. Tom McInnes of Salisbury was too busy to ride the entire Century at once. So he rode the first half, then went and saw his patients before returning to finish the rest of the tour.

The Sea Gull Century is now the largest single-day event in Salisbury, and if its popularity continues to grow, next year's Century is sure to be an even greater success.

and friends, who make use of local hotels, motels, restaurants and stores."

Chris McQueeney, a Century volunteer, who spent Saturday afternoon answering questions and handing out T-shirts said "this is great for Salisbury State." Not only do the riders experience the beauty of the Eastern Shore, but they also experience the beauty of SSU and the hospitality of its people.

Though the Century ride was the main event of the

Student Advisory Council Names Mahoney Executive Chair

Experts continually tell college students that leadership skills are something every potential employee must have. One student who has taken this advice to heart is SSU senior Sean Mahoney.

Not only is Mahoney the Student Government Association president, but he was recently named the Executive Chair of the Student Advisory Council to the Maryland Higher Education Commission (MHEC).

MHEC is responsible for coordinating Maryland's colleges (both two and four year institutions) and universities on issues such as enrollment and transfer policies.

Mahoney will serve a one year term as the executive chair. He will be in charge of all Student Advisory Council meetings and must attend both the MHEC Executive Council meetings and the full commission meetings. At the latter two meetings, he will represent the views and concerns of the Student Advisory Council.

"I'm honored that the group of students that are serving on the Student Advisory Council have

Technical Services responds to student needs

Yoav Wachman
Flyer Staff Writer

If you ever go to see a Dance Company performance or the annual Variety Show you will probably notice the sophisticated sound system, the array of stage lights and the numerous special effects that embellish the performance. While the performers do their number on stage, a group of dedicated workers turn strobe lights on and off, adjust the sound and make sure that everything is picture perfect. This group of magic-makers is part of the Technical Crew headed by Tony Broadbent.

Broadbent started the crew in 1989 to take some burden off the Theater Department which did most of the technical work around campus. From that point on, the Theater Department oversaw technical work only for theater production, while Broadbent and his workers took care of all other technical projects. When Broadbent was hired, the school offered few technical services. Broadbent said that six years ago the Dance Company was "using candles in coffee cans to light the stage."

Broadbent was a prime candidate to head the crew because of his technical knowledge, which he gained by managing a local Radio Shack store and doing technical work around campus.

When enrolled in Salisbury State College in 1979, he tackled several big projects. Among other things he built and ran the sound studio for WSCL, the classical music station in Caruthers Hall, and assembled most of the equipment for the student-run station which was called WSSC back then. After he graduated, Broadbent continued to work with WSCL and occasionally provided technical help at the Wicomico Civic Center.

When the crew started it consisted of Broadbent and five students. Back then, it was called Auditoria Services. Broadbent estimates that his crew worked on approximately 100 events during its first year. At the time, the crew's work was confined to Holloway Hall Auditorium, Caruthers Hall Auditorium and the Wicomico Room. Two years ago the name of the crew was changed to Technical Services, largely to reflect the fact that its work was no longer limited to the auditoriums.

This year Broadbent has 12 students and a full-time assistant working with him. Broadbent increased the size of his crew in response to the increasing number of events on campus which require technical work. He expects Technical Services to work on as many as 375 different events this year, up from 325 events last year.

Recently, the crew helped set up several events outdoors, including the fireworks during Welcome Week and the President's Welcome Banquet in August.

Shane Forsythe, a crew leader and the oldest member of the group, said that Broadbent, together with a few workers, managed to set up an entire band. This included stage lights and a sound system for an outdoor banquet.

The President's Welcome Banquet was not the only project Broadbent and Forsythe were involved in this summer. Each summer, Broadbent, his assistant and two or three other crew faith in me to provide leadership," Mahoney said.

At the October 7 MHEC Student Advisory Council meeting, Mahoney ran unopposed. He said, "I was nominated and no one cared to run against me. It was not a lack of interest, the sentiment among the returning members was that I was probably the most qualified for the position."

Kurt Sandvig, the former executive chair, had an idea that Mahoney would run for the position he left empty. "I didn't know for sure, but I had a strong suspicion," Sandvig said, "Sean was the logical choice."

Vincent Craig, an MHEC representative, feels that Mahoney is well qualified for his new position. "I can't think of too many other people who are as well suited to do this job as Sean. He has a very high level of commitment," he said.

Sandvig echoed Craig's thoughts. He revealed that Mahoney will be much more effective at the job than he was. "Sean pretty much assumed [the position] last year as vice chair when my responsibilities overwhelmed me," said Sandvig, "he has a good grasp of the job."

"Sean is more organized than I could ever dream of being. He is disgustingly organized," joked Sandvig.

Mahoney, in true form, already has plans for his term. According to Mahoney, the Student Advisory Council will work in four main areas: budgeting, distance education, minority issues and accountability. He also hopes to make the Council more proactive by bringing ideas from different institutions to the commission.

Before becoming executive chair, Mahoney was actively involved in the SGA. He has been involved since his sophomore year and has filled the positions of senator, parliamentarian and is currently president.

While Mahoney has been in the senate, the SGA has worked on many projects such as publishing the campus directory, changing the election process for SGA officers, working to add extra cable channels, implementing course evaluations, and lobbying for Internet privileges for all students.

Craig mentioned that it is important to have a leader who will be vocal, yet tactful and professional. He also said, "Sean will carry himself with dignity and command the respect from those he interacts with."

Sandvig feels that Mahoney was the best choice for the job. "There is no doubt in my mind that he'll do a great job," he said.

Mahoney admitted that his is not a lone effort. He stressed, "I owe a lot of thanks to Kurt and the work he has done over the last two years in getting the Student Advisory Council to where it is now. We've also got an excellent executive committee that will be able to tackle issues placed in front of us," he said.

members, stay around to provide technical services to the numerous groups who use campus facilities for conferences.

Broadbent explained that having conferences during the summer, "allows Technical Services and other organizations such as Dining Services to keep good people on staff because they do not have to lay them off every nine months."

Forsythe explained that, "summers are very busy. There could be anything from a soccer camp to a religious group. Many of these groups have lectures in the morning and dances at night, and we help them [get] set up." Technical Services does not provide its services to the conference groups for free, although Broadbent claims the fee he charges for his services is below market price.

As of last year, clubs and on-campus organizations also have to pay for technical services though they pay at a discounted rate. Broadbent explains that Technical Services has to charge for its work because it is set as an auxiliary service and is not allowed to get money from the state. The crew uses the money to pay its members' wages and to obtain new equipment.

Organizations who need equipment set up for an event go through Facility Reservations to obtain a room on campus and then fill out a work order to employ Technical Services. Because Broadbent works in conjunction with Facility Reservations and Conference Services, the three offices were moved together to the second floor of the University Center last year. When the Commons is completed the three offices will be moved to where the campus post office is.

Although Technical Services is usually employed by other organizations, it annually organizes a show all by itself—the Variety Show. Broadbent said he started the Variety Show, "first, because it gives students a venue to preform the way they want to perform, and second, because it shows others what we are capable of doing."

The Variety Show requires a lot of work. Broadbent estimates that his workers spent between 350 and 400 hours last year working on the show. The work is both physically and mentally demanding. Broadbent tries to be creative in order to keep the job and the show interesting.

Newcomers are taught the ropes by Broadbent and other experienced crew members. The training period could last as long as a semester, and even the old members of the crew continually have to learn how to use the new equipment.

Forsythe says the most difficult thing about the job is the variability factor. "On some weeks I only work for two or three hours, but sometimes plans [coincide], and there are several events on the same weekend."

Broadbent says that he selects students who are interested in the technical aspects of the work and are willing to put in the extra effort.

Since its foundation, Technical Services has managed to adapt to the increasing demand for its services. Broadbent vows to keep Technical Services in agreement with student needs, whatever those needs might be.

ATTENTION!

On or about Oct. 24 the Senate will be voting on the SLISIE bill which will affect ALL college students.

The SLISIE bill stands for Student Loan In School Interest Exemption. If the law is passed there will be an increase in tuition, student loans will collect interest, and the grace period to pay off the loan will be eliminated.

On the day that the bill will be voted on, transportation will be provided to Washington DC for a national demonstration. Contact the SGA at 548-4757 to get involved.

Bellavance reveals he is ready to step down

John Duffy

Dr. Thomas E. Bellavance never intended to be a college administrator, though in his fifteen year role as president of Salisbury State University, he has proven to be as effective a leader in his field as is likely to be found.

Pledging in 1980 to give the college a firm sense of purpose, Bellavance has lead Salisbury State College out of public image and fiscal nightmare, through major state funding cuts and into a position ready for the changes the next ten years might bring. Ralph Waldo Emerson said it more clearly, "an institution is but the shadow of a man."

His spacious yet comfortable office, surrounded by multi-volume literary anthologies, is dominated by the two massive second story windows facing the bright front lawn of Holloway Hall (named for the first president of the college).

His desk is squeezed into one windowed corner, and the room has a feel of respectability and subtle strength, ideals that have characterized Bellavance's 15 years as president of Salisbury State University, a position from which he will resign at the end of this semester.

Bellavance recalls a happy youth in the mill town of Mossup, Connecticut. "My childhood was very much a Huck Finn affair," he laughs in a gentle baritone "there was no organized sports or little league."

An inspiring high school teacher encouraged Bellavance, and he became the first in his family to attend college, enrolling at the University of Connecticut. "I had several jobs, working my way through college, and I've never gotten out of [education]. I was just so fascinated by it. By the possibilities it gives you."

Intending to pursue a law career, Bellavance graduated with a degree in English, but not before taking two years off to join the Army reserves in order to fit under the soon to be nullified G.I. Bill, acquiring four years of funded education. Following college, he taught high school much to his dissatisfaction and decided to seek a masters degree at Northwestern University instead.

"I then took a doctoral fellowship at Duquesne simply for survival, and landed a great job teaching high school in El Salvador for one year. They paid $4,000 a year," said Bellavance. While at Duquesne, Bellavance met his wife Elizabeth, the two were married upon his return from El Salvador.

Bellavance soon began work at Michigan State University towards his PhD, where he also taught for seven years. "When I was there, there were 42,000 undergraduate students. I felt so sorry for those kids, searching for identity in that mass," remarked Bellavance. Consequently, all of Bellavance's positions since then have been at smaller institutions.

"I never intended to be in administration," added Bellavance, it was a case of being frustrated with administration as a teacher. So I figured 'I can do this better than these people.'"

Even so, Bellavance served as Dean of Faculty at Urbana College in Ohio for five years, followed by six years as vice president of academic affairs at Farmingham State College in Massachusetts, "where I wasn't entirely happy with the way things were going," he remembered.

Meanwhile, SSC, with an enrollment of 4,500 students, was dealing with a public image problem that would take ten years to shake off. In 1979, college president Dr. Norman C. Crawford, who enjoyed tremendous popularity among the student body was asked by the board of regents to resign.

Bellavance explained, "he thought he had a commitment for more money, spent it, and the commitment didn't come through." The result was an $800,000 deficit that Bellavance managed to remedy in just one year, but the damage to SSC's public image was done. Several students being involved in a gang rape attracted criticism from the National Organization of Women, which further eroded the public reputation of the college. Kegs in the hallways of residence buildings were regular features to the decor.

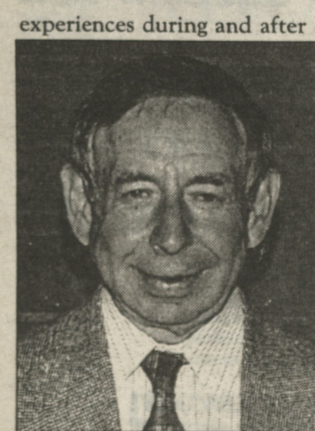

Salisbury State was a party school, it had a definitive "jock" image.

Dr. Crawford had stressed varsity athletics as a priority for the college, according to Bellavance. "I upon the camps."

Horvitz served in the army until 1945. It was then that he met his wife, Halina Jakubowicz, a Jewish survivor who had been liberated from a concentration camp. The two were married in June of 1946, before returning to the U.S. They now have three children and six grandchildren.

In returning from Germany, Horvitz began to work for the government in personal management. He retired in 1991, but not for long. Now, five years later, he has come out of retirement to help curate an exhibition at the National Museum of American Jewish Military in Washington D.C.

The exhibit features photographs and memorabilia, as well as recordings of accounts given by Jewish soldiers of the U.S. Army, who witnessed the Holocaust firsthand.

For Horvitz, the process of screening the veterans for the recordings was both difficult and emotional. "Almost 50 years later, most couldn't get through an interview without [showing] strong emotion," he said.

The last exhibit however, offers some relief from the strife. "It shows how G.I.'s helped survivors [assimilate] with the world," said Horvitz about the "Love and Renewal" portion of the exhibit. Many of the survivors got housing, clothes and food, as well as emotional support from Jewish soldiers, and since have tried to get in touch with one another. Horvitz also noted that four of the G.I.'s married survivors.

Its hard enough to comprehend the Holocaust just hearing about it, Horvitz said.

"It must be incredibly difficult to live everyday after seeing it firsthand," said SSU student Jenn Pusey after attending the lecture on Thursday.

"I will do all that I can, as long as I can; the rest is up to you," said Horvitz when asked about the future of Holocaust education. As time goes on, the number of those who felt the effects of the Holocaust first hand gets smaller, it is important that people not forget the atrocities that took place.

Other programs about the Holocaust will be offered at SSU as part of their Fall series. On October 25, Doris Bergen of the University of Vermont, author of "Twisted Cross: The German Christian Movement in the Third Reich," will discuss "Projecting Memory: Film and the Holocaust," and on November 1, the film "Shindlers List," will be presented in the Caruthers Hall Auditorium.

"Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?" still showing at the Black Box

Robyn Bridge
Flyer Staff Writer

The red-hot drama, "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," performed by Salisbury State University Theater, opened Friday October 13. The play is directed by Dr. Andrew Hepburn, who says the play is "one of the most powerful dramas in contemporary theater."

The play centers around Martha, the daughter of a college president, and her husband George, who is an associate professor of history at the college. It opens as they return home from a cocktail party for faculty and are expecting guests.

The two guests, Nick and Honey, have no idea what they are in for when they arrive at the house. Nick is a new biology instructor at the college and is described by Martha as "handsome." Honey, Nick's wife, is a timid, mousy woman, who basks in Nick's glowing achievements.

Before the guests arrive, Martha and George are bickering. As the night goes on, the bickering turns into total warfare. Nick and Honey get pulled into the fracas before they know it and are subject to insults from both Martha and George.

Martha is definitely the instigator in most of the arguments. She seems to enjoy arguing and playing devil's advocate. Martha's character is played by Becky Ford. "Martha is loud, obnoxious, vulgar, and she wears the pants in the family. That's the way she likes it," says Ford.

George, played by Robert McCall, is not as harsh and vulgar as Martha, but is always involved in a feud. He takes on Martha's icy arguments, and he starts fights with Nick, who is "the stud."

"Not only does [Honey] want me, but [Martha] wants me too," says Scott Southern, who plays Nick in the SSU production. Honey is "a little slow, a little bit of a prude, and she's a little wacky," according to Katie George, who portrays Honey in the play.

When Albee released "Virginia Woolf" in 1962, it immediately caused controversy, because of its portrayal of college faculty life. "Virginia Woolf's" biggest success was as a movie, which starred Elizabeth Taylor as Martha and Richard Burton as George. Taylor won an Academy Award for her portrayal.

Even though the movie was a masterpiece, some of the scenes were considered taboo for the times. These parts were cut from the movie, but still appear in the play.

"There's a lot of bad language, adultery, drinking, drunkenness in this play. They cut a lot of it out in the film," said Ford. There is a lot more you can gather from the play than the film.

The lighting, which was designed by David Shuhly, sets a foreboding tone. The set, which was created by Gerald Patt, conveys the sense of a disorganized family. Costumes, designed by Stella Malone, are vintage 1962.

Edward Albee won the New York Drama Critics Award in 1963 for "Who's Afraid of Virginia Woolf?," his first full-length play. His earlier one-act plays, "The Zoo Story," "The Sandbox" and "The American Dream," were all written as "Theater of the Absurd" plays, which have since become classics. After "Virginia Woolf" Albee won three Pulitzer Prizes for "A Delicate Balance," "Seascape" and "Three Tall Women."

The play will continue Thursday through Saturday, October 19th through the 21st, at 8 p.m. There will also be a matinee Sunday, October 22 at 2 p.m. All shows are performed at the Black Box Theater in Fulton Hall. Tickets are general admission and $8. They are $6 for senior citizens and free for SSU students with student ID. Reservations can be made through the box office at 543-6228.

Leold

by Roger & Salem Salloom

Sometimes I see a girl that reminds me of my ex girlfriend and I start thinking about how great she was and how much I want her back.

Then I think about how she was never happy with anything I did to please her and how she threw things at me and how she would yell at me.

Pretty soon I think about how happy I am to not have a girlfriend and how much money I'm saving.

Then I realize how much I used to like her sister and I wonder if she'd go out with me. And what kind of present I should buy her... I also wonder if her sister would throw stuff at me.

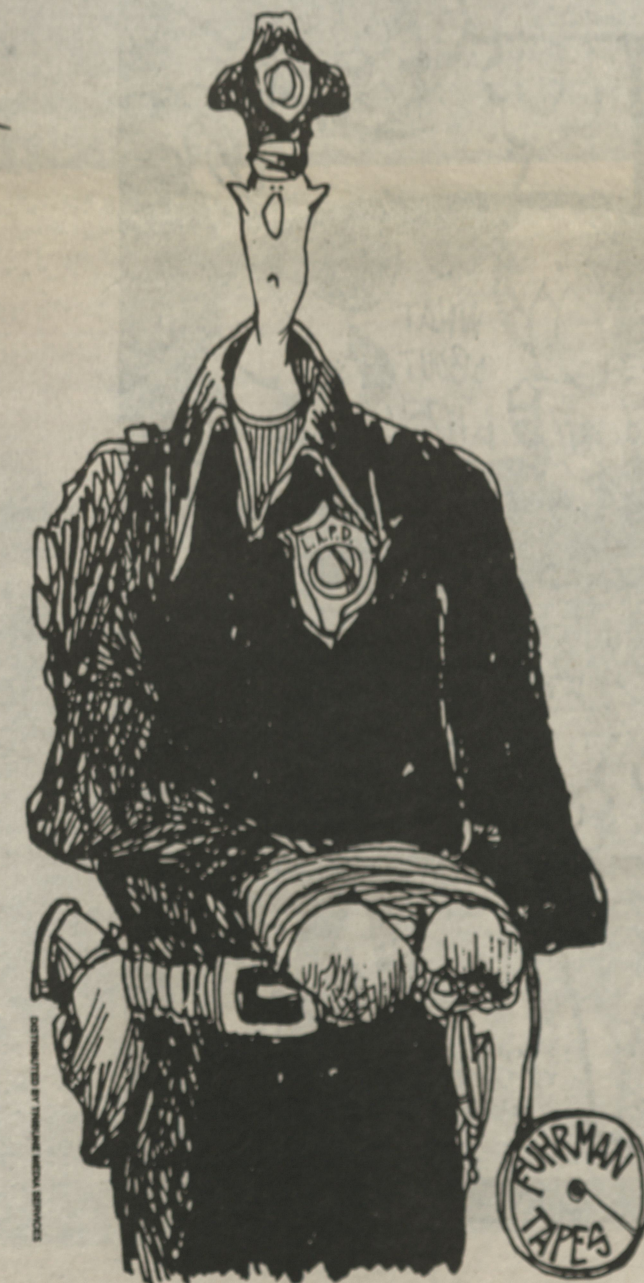

Then I get her sister's phone number and try to call her when her boyfriend isn't around.

Then I start to think about how adventurous life can be when you have no common sense whatsoever and a completely twisted notion of what "love" is and... there is a good possibility that I have finally turned into a pervert.

Life is good.

think varsity athletics have to kept in proper perspective," he said.

Upon assuming the throne in June of 1980, Bellavance saw great promise in the future of the institution. Intent on improving SSC's public image, Bellavance said in open letter to alumni, "I have discovered that the public we serve is ignorant of what we are all about."

He then lobbied the state for the completion of Maggs Physical Activities Center, which had been sitting uncompleted for two years. He then began a process of integrating programs with University of Maryland Eastern Shore.

"The University has always been underfunded, and continues to be," Bellavance contends. In this respect, he has on numerous occasions gone personally to the state legislature lobbying for SSU's interests, fighting budget cuts and unhealthy mandates.

A constant presence in the Bellavance era has been the University of Maryland System, a body organized to bring every state college under one governing arm. Somewhere in the streamlining attempt, a certain appreciation and connection with the fundamentals of education was lost, some think.

Bellavance remains cautious, "If the board continues to want to systemize and homogenize, its going to be very slow going. What may be good for us may not be good for Frostburg [State University]. Each institution should be given the flexibility and the freedom to follow its own objectives. Don't try to manage the institutions from a hundred miles away," he said.

The success of the University under Bellavance is unparalleled. Everything has gone up: admissions, applications, SAT scores, scholarship funds. Assets in the Salisbury State University Foundation totalled $16.2 million, more than any other four year comprehensive school in the UMS. The school was also listed in The Guide to 101 of the Best Values in America's Colleges and Universities. Also under Bellavance, the school was granted university status, a critical change when it came to state funding. A more important change in recognition.

Above all, Bellavance insists that the strength of the University lies in its faculty, not its accolades. "The success of this place is due to the kind of people we have working here. They're all going in the right direction. People don't invest in you unless you are successful," he said.

In 1994 however, Bellavance was diagnosed with lung cancer, and many thought he would leave the university quite soon to undergo treatment. But Bellavance, now at 61, was already thinking it would be only a few years before he retired.

"Prior to knowing I had cancer, I was looking at maybe three years or so of this. I was getting the sense of being worn down, [and] I did have a few more things planned and wanted to stick around, but then the cancer came. The therapy takes away a lot of your energy," said Bellavance.

Bellavance insists that his health is not the deciding factor in his resignation. "I really didn't feel in good conscience, that I was able to mount the energetic vigor that's really due this University. Recent tests indicate that it's really possible that this cancer is going away," he acknowledged.

Over the next year, Dr. Bellavance will be active in the transition to a new president, and he admits he has worries about the future of the University in someone else's hands.

"The wrong person in my position could turn this ship and make it run in the wrong direction," said Bellavance. "If we get someone in here who has ambitions about making this a research institute, or has some [idea] about size and wants to boost the population to 15,000 students, or any other number of things, all for ego, that would bother me very much," he added.

In the process, Bellavance will insist on active participation of the SSU community in choosing a new president. "I want to ensure that the people on this campus have a heavy say in how things will go," he insists.

Among all the accomplishments of the past fifteen years, Bellavance is most proud of the development of the student body.

"That's the real result, the product. The students are motivated, they're intelligent. If you notice, you'll not see any graffiti on this campus. If you put a student in a decent place, they'll act decent-put them in a pig pen, like some of our absentee landlords have given them, then they begin to act like pigs," Bellavance said.

Students are like anybody else, they like fun, and they like quiet, they like order, and they like freedom. And I think we've been successful in orchestrating the type of environment that is conducive to learning," he said, "that is our greatest achievement."

The opinion among faculty and students alike is a resounding approval for the 15 years that Bellavance has been at the helm. Vice President of Academic Affairs Dr. Joe Gilbert, at SSU now for 25 years, says "the University is in the best position in its history, Bellavance lead us through an era of great growth," said Gilbert, "our new president will face a new set of challenges."

Longtime English professor and Director of Graduate Studies Dr. William Horne, says it will be difficult, if not impossible to replace President Bellavance. "He has been a strong advocate for this University and the Salisbury community, the UMS, and before the state legislature," said Horne.

Dr. Bellavance, who will remain in Salisbury after resigning, is assured of the future of the University and is eager to watch the institution move forward and grow, while continuing on its path of excellence. But Bellavance looks forward to retirement.

"I want to have the luxury of getting up in the morning, deciding what I want to do, and then doing it. It's that simple, having that freedom," Bellavance said. About his resignation he adds frankly, "I could have hung around and rested on my laurels I guess, but its time for me to get the hell out of the way."

And unfortunately, he will.

SSU's Sister Act

Urban sisters come up big in soccer

Jason King
Flyer Staff Writer

The Salisbury State University women's soccer team defeated visiting Frostburg State 3-1 on Saturday in a dramatic double overtime game over the in-state rival. Courtney and Danielle Urban both knocked in goals to break a 1-1 tie leading the Lady Gulls to the win.

Danielle nailed a goal for the Gulls in the first period, but Bridget Kelly returned the favor for Frostburg to tie the game at the half. Danielle threatened to score several times in the second period but SSU came up empty and the game went into overtime.

Salisbury came out fired up for the extra period, and with just over nine minutes left in the first O.T. it appeared they had the winning goal. Courtney Urban drilled the ball past the Frostburg goalie and into the back of the net. The apparent score was negated, however, the referee called an offside penalty on Salisbury.

After several more missed opportunities, the Gulls were forced to play a second overtime. Courtney Urban scored the go-ahead goal with 7:43 left in the game to give Salisbury a 2-1 lead. Three minutes later Danielle added her second goal of the contest on a remarkable play. She raced to the ball inside the goal box and just beat FSU's goalie, who was also charging, to the ball. She then dribbled around the fallen goalie and tapped the ball into the unprotected net. Frostburg never really threatened in the overtime and SSU walked away with the win.

SSU dominated Frostburg 25-3 in shots on goal and had a 12-2 corner kicks advantage. The Gulls had the ball in Frostburg's half of the field for the majority of the game, and almost the entire overtime. SSU controlled the play all day and the entire team is to be commended on a stellar performance.

It was a stellar day for the Urban sisters. They totaled three goals and two yellow cards on the day. The yellow cards came courtesy of some hard play by the third Urban sibling, Nicole. She received one in regulation for a collision with the FSU goalie. Her second came at the end of the first overtime, although it was a product of poor officiating. Nicole played inspired soccer all day and was extremely aggressive.

They might not be singing nuns, but this sister act is a hard one to follow.

Chance to win a free truck

Are you tired of driving around campus in an old clunker? Are you looking for a new vehicle at an affordable price? How does FREE sound to you?

If you are in the right place at the right time this weekend you could walk away with a brand new four wheel drive pick-up truck, courtesy of Towne Toyota.

On Saturday October 21 at the men's home soccer game against Mary Washington you will have that chance. The game is at 2 p.m. and admission is free.

At halftime, representatives of Towne Toyota will select two spectators at random. Those two will have a chance to win a brand new, 1995, 4-wheel drive Toyota Tacoma pick-up truck from Towne Toyota. Each of the contestants will participate in a blindfolded prize key grab. If your key starts the engine to the truck, its yours to drive away.

Everyone in attendance will have an equal chance at being one of the contestants. Do not miss out by not showing up!

Lacrosse to be honored

The members of the 1995 Sea Gull men's lacrosse team and the campus will have a couple of chances to relive the excitement of last May's national championship in the coming days.

At this Saturday's men's soccer game against Mary Washington, the players and coaches will receive their championship rings in a special halftime ceremony. Game time is 2 p.m. at the SSU soccer field, with halftime activities scheduled to begin at approximately 2:45.

On Monday, October 23, the Salisbury City Council will present Head Coach Jim Berkman with a proclamation declaring Tuesday, October 24 to be "SSU Men's Lacrosse Day" in Salisbury. The proclamation will be presented to Berkman at the start of the council's regularly scheduled meeting at the Government Office Building at 7 p.m.

Assistant coach Jeff Freimanis agrees.

"This is definitely a reminder of what can happen when you let things slip," said Freimanis. "This is not the best of our meets, but we can still salvage a few parts. On the positive side, our rivals don't know our true abilities, since we did not perform up to our potential."

The SSU men's team suffered due to the pre-race injuries, but Loyola College had a greater misfortune in losing one of their mens competitors during the race. He was struck in the face by a deer's hoof as a group of four deer tried to cross the wooded path where the race was taking place. The injured racer went down with a concussion and was taken to the hospital.

SSU returns next weekend to compete in the Capital Athletic Conference meet at York College.

Swimming Seagulls

SSU's swim team ready for season

Jason King
Flyer Staff Writer

New and improved could be considered an oxymoron but nothing better describes Salisbury State University's swim team. Although the team is not new, many things about it are. A new coach, new members and a new attitude have the team set to improve on last season.

Last year the women's team placed third in the Capital Athletic Conference, while the men took fourth. Things should be different this year.

"The guys team, we had two or three meets last year that were really close. If we win some of those close meets, there's a definite chance that we could finish high in the conference," said Matt Raschka, men's co-captain.

His counterpart, co-captain Scott Wray also seems high on the team's prospects. "We have new recruits, really strong school backing and finally a coach," he said.

The team is led by first year coach Jill Stephenson. Stephenson came to SSU from Olibet College in Michigan, where she started a varsity swim team and coached for six years. "I applied for the job because it seemed interesting. It's very similar to what I've done in the past," remarked Stephenson. In addition to coaching, Stephenson also teaches

Gull Takes

Football

SSU Football defeated Newport News Apprentice 22-10 this Saturday and now holds a four game winning streak. Marc Hannah recovered a fumble in the first quarter for a touchdown. A touchdown by freshman Darron Wimbish led off the second quarter, followed by a third score by Marty Brennan off of a blocked Newport punt by Derrick Arnold. Quarterback Dave Doy was 13 out of 24, passing for 121 yards.

Field Hockey

In a close 1-0 defeat of Goucher on Tuesday, SSU field hockey claimed the number one seed in the CAC conference for the upcoming tournament. Freshman Megan Hopper scored the victory shot with 14 seconds remaining in the game, off an assist from junior Sue Fatz.

Women's Soccer

SSU shut out Virginia Wesleyan 3-0 on Wednesday at home, thanks to the unyielding goal protection of Kristi

PHEC 240 and Health 101.

Two assistant coaches have helped Jill make the transition and get the team ready to compete. Bryan Gomes, a former swimmer for SSU, and Tara Murphy, also a former collegiate swimmer at Duquesne, have played a big role in preparing the squad.

In addition to a new coach, the Gulls also have a number of rookie swimmers. Out of 26 swimmers, 14 are newcomers. Amy Howard and Becky Dement top the list of first year standouts for the women. Jeff Waltz and the Mazzella brothers (Mike and Brian) look good for the men.

These "freshman" swimmers will be able to rely on several key returners from last year to score points for the team. Noreen Zuiderhof and co-captains Nikki Cunningham and Cindy Sotaski will be counted on to lead the women. Raschka, Wray and Mike Metcalf are reliable veteran swimmers for the men.

To accompany so many new faces the team has adopted a new attitude. "I think we have a lot of enthusiasm this year," smiled Cunningham.

Raschka would seem to agree. "We got it all together this year," he said.

The team is hoping for support from the student body at competitions and is doing its best to support worthy causes itself. On Friday, October 20, the team will begin a 24-hour relay. They will swim from noon on Friday until noon on Saturday. The swimmers have sponsors for the event and all of the proceeds go to the Wheel Chair Olympics. The team is also supporting Student Athlete Days by attending other sporting events.

SSU's swim team is ready for the pool, and all they need is some fan support. The Gulls' first home meet is November 8, and they guarantee some great swimming and a good time.

"It's the start of a really big thing," said Wray. He went on to predict that in a couple of years SSU swimming will be a powerhouse "like lacrosse." That's quite a goal but the team has the coach, the swimmers and the attitude to do it. Anything can happen.

the second half with goals by Keith Muir and Kevin Rhodes. Pat Crawford and Mike Guiffreda each recorded assists.

Volleyball

SSU lost it's road match versus Goucher 3-1 on Tuesday. This was a tough CAC loss, despite good play by the Lady Gulls. Brook Salitrik led the team with 14 kills and seven blocks. Lori Sharpless and Jen Bowman each had 12 kills, and Bowman added 53 assists.

In the first part of the Western Maryland Invitational, SSU won both of its matches, defeating York and Washington College. They went on to defeat Catholic, Susquehanna and Franklin and Marshall in pool play, Bridgewater in semi-finals, and faced York in the finals. They put up a fight in the second game, with a score of 17-19. Courtney Moore had 11 kills, Lindsay McNaney and Brooke Salitrik each had five kills.

SSU fell 3-2 to Frostburg on Saturday, despite an attempted comeback in

Cross-Country misses high expectations at state championships

Elizabeth Pagel
Flyer Staff Writer

The Salisbury State mens and women's cross country teams traveled to Hagerstown Junior College this past Saturday to compete in the Maryland State Cross Country Championships. They went up against conference rivals Frostburg State and Goucher College in the Division III competition.

The team's high expectations were not met as the SSU women's team failed to defend their state championship title. They fell to Frostburg and claimed second place in the Division II and Division III rankings, and fourth in the overall competition.

"We lacked the killer instinct," said coach Latham. "We have talent but we are not using it. It seemed as if everyone was running individually and not for the team."

Lori Frei placed sixth in the overall top ten runners with a time of 19:56. Vicki Huchko and Kelly Delp placed 26th and 35th, respectively, rounding out the top three SSU competitors.

The men's team, which is still struggling to have all of its members racing, placed tenth in the overall competition. Led by Ryan McComas, who placed 27th with a time of 29:15 on the 5 mile course, the men fielded a seven man racing team. They were missing two key competitors in Joe Waldron and Wes Smith.

Matt McGinnis, a newcomer to the men's team, feels that the lack of important team members and hazardous course conditions had a detrimental effect on the men's race, but the increased competition at this race helped.

"We had a chance to chase down some other schools," said McGinnis. "I know our top runners did not get the times they wanted, but the mud made the whole race slippery and slow. We know what needs to be done and should use this as a building block."
